ECU President Mr. Zurab Azmaiparashvili congratulated all the teams captains and the winners.
Magnus Carlsen was racing for the top together with Alireza Firouzja, but in the direct encounter in the penultimate round Magnus took a victory in basic pawns drawn endgame and won the event with the round to spare.

Firouzja Alireza won the last round and came second lagging behind the World Champion for only one point, scoring 18.5 points.

Leading Armenian chess player and world No.9 Aronian Levon took the third place with score of 17.5 points. Caruana Fabiano was fourth with 15.5 points.

Polish prodigy Duda Jan-Kzysztof ended the event on the 5th place but his advent on the event will be remembered since he was the one to bring the conclusion of Magnus Carlsen's 125-games unbeaten streak in classical chess which has ended after two years and two months. Five rounds later, Magnus suffered another loss against Aronian in the final round.

Norwegian Champion 2019 Tari Aryan scored 3.5 points and came on the 6th place.

The event took place from 5th-16th October at Clarion Hotel Energy in Stavanger Norway and was played as 10 rounds double robin round tournament.

Players got following points per round:
- Victory main game: 3 points
- Loss main game: 0 points
- Draw main game & victory Armageddon: 1.5 points
- Draw main game & loss Armageddon: 1 point

1 What are You doing in life in the current moment?
For many years I work for Croatian Chess Federation and last four years I am a National Team Trainer. Still I am active as player—just recently I got silver medal in National Championship. But mostly I play in different Team Championships—except my native Zagreb, I play in German Bundesliga, Slovenian, Hungarian and Bosna Championships.

2 Your recollections with meetings with World Champions?
In my long career I met many World Champions, but the most dear for me are two tournaments and two games with legendary Misha Tal, in Tbilisi 1988. And Marseilles 1989. I achieved even positive score 1,5-0,5 but the most important was to spend time and analyse post mortem with him. After Marseille tournament it was big reception with important persons and in one moment Misha told me—let us sit on the road and have a good smoke!

3 Your best game
I can not say the best, but the most adventurous was definitely game Kjetil Lie—Kožul, Tromso ol 2014.

4 Which Your achievement You consider to be most important.
Nominally my best achievements are—Title of European Champion 2006 and place among World Top 16 on World Championship 2004. But for me very important are numerous wins in Opens all around Europe plus many team titles in surrounding countries—around 50! Plus three wins in European Cups with my Bosna Sarajevo!

5 Best and most important chess books.
Let us say My System, Aron Nimzowitsch

6 How did You start Your career.
It was usual for young players from my surroundings—it started first playing Mother and Father at home, then school competitions, chess club school then tournaments and later decision to become professional chess player.

7 Your favorite openings.
Easy answer...Sicilian Defence and Kings Indian for my whole chess career!

8 Who was the most difficult and easiest opponent during Your career.
I don’t want to comment about easiest opponent, but most difficult were Mickey Adams and then Kirche Georgiev.

9 Non chess—best, book, film and singer for You.
Book: The Secret of The Kindom, Mika Waltari, Film: I am not special filmofil, but I enjoyed to see few times film Ben Hur, Singer: Roy Orbison

10 Favorite city, food and drink.
City: Zagreb Of course, I am very subjective, but it is really great place to live. To play chess—the best place is Bled, Slovenia! Food—definitely good steak! Drink— I am not interesting here, as all my career I use to drink just water
What is a fair play in chess and what are its limits? Or maybe there aren't any? This time, in the arbiter’s corner, we present two cases bordering on the rules of chess, fair play and good manners.

First case – in a blitz tournament, one of the players playing black has a completely winning position. He promoted a pawn into the Queen, “checking” the opponent. Unfortunately, by mistake he promoted his pawn into the Queen of opposite color (the color of the opponent pieces). The opponent replied by king, escaping under the check. Having realized the situation, the black player tried to change “his” Queen into black piece, but the opponent didn’t agree and called the arbiter. The arbiter stated that an incorrect move has been made (promotion of a pawn into a Queen of the opposite color), but since the opponent has not complained about it and another move has already been made, the game should be continued with the “bad” white Queen. The black player resigned. This time we don’t ask if the arbiter did the right thing, but if the white player broke the fair play principles, seeing the opponent’s mistake and benefiting from it?

In my opinion, it would undoubtedly be very noble if he let the opponent replace the queen, but on the other hand, chess is a game of mistakes, so if the opponent makes them they can be used. What do you think about it?

The second case – in a rapid tournament, the player playing white has an exchange up but the position is still so complex, that there is no clear way for winning. He made a move and his opponent having about eight minutes on his clock, started thinking and after about two minutes later held out his hand and said “Okay, I won’t continue this”. The white player, a bit surprised, shook the opponent’s hand and, convinced that black has resigned, reported the win to the arbiter. After making the pairing for the next round, black player complained to the arbiter, that he has half a point less and his previous game ended in a draw. He claimed that white offered a draw and he agreed. What should the arbiter do?

The mere handshake can be interpreted both as agreeing to a draw and also as resignation, although it does not mean anything in itself. So it would be appropriate to interpret the words “Okay, I won’t continue that”, but what do they mean? They can also be interpreted in two ways, but I think if someone says they will not continue, it means resignation rather than agreeing to a draw. The arbiter asked the players to reconstruct the position, what white player did and black agreed that position is correct. Based on unclear, complex position, the arbiters decided to change the result into the draw. What do you think about it?

The lesson from the second case is that it is very important good to be sure what kind of intention has the opponent before shaking his hand. But how to do this in good manner way?
